Business Declares a Climate Emergency Part 1

If you want to make a real commitment to reducing the environmental impact of your business, where and how do you start? Declaring a Climate Emergency could just be just the catalyst you need to get things moving in your business. Eoin McQuone, Gill Smith and Caroline Aistrop will facilitate a workshop to help you explore the practicalities of declaring a climate emergency in your business and what it might mean for your business going forward.

Eoin McQuone

Eoin believes that building a profitable, future-proof business nowadays requires a change from the traditional model. It's all about creating a business that not only makes a profit now but that is set up to continue to grow and flourish in a world of climate change and increasingly scarce resources. That's where Sustainable Business Design comes in! The Business formed in January 2019 helps its clients uncover ways to improve the sustainability of your business whether it be products, services or systems in ways that will drive growth and profit.
