#BI21.3 Question Storming – Mental Health

What role should the business community play in addressing mental health in the workplace?

In the second quarter of 2021, businesses need to plan ahead to adjust to a changed work-life environment. As the economy begins to open up and as employees return to offices, companies need to find a new equilibrium that helps employers and employees create a healthy, stable workplace. Things will be different. Mental health was a serious, if under acknowledged problem before the pandemic. How can employers help workers face unexpected challenges and proactively support their emotional and mental well-being? Question Storming, is a unique process designed to tackle complex issues, to think beyond traditional approaches to problem solving. Participants may only ask questions, to see the issue through the lens of others. Held under Chatham House rules, the most challenging questions will be taken forward to Solution Storming later in the day.
